

Both Sides of the Desk

Join us for a nostalgic journey to an elementary school in a small town in upstate New York. It was a time when parents sent their children to school and relaxed, knowing they were safe.

The book includes a chapter about Jimmy, a boy with cystic fibrosis, who was so excited about attending "the big school" that he set two alarm clocks every night. Another chapter describes the reactions of the children in the school when their fourth grade teacher dies suddenly.

Bob Kinsella, who worked as a principal from 1966 until 1985, tells stories that are funny, tragic, and heart-warming. His co-author, Janine DeBaise, was a student in the same school district during those years, and shares some of her experiences as both a student and a teacher. Their combined stories will give you a look inside an elementary school - from both sides of the desk.

In the memory of Jimmy DeMarco, all profits from the sale of this book will go to the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation.
